
Abstract

Additive cyclic square wave voltammetry for coordination-adsorptive catalytic systems controlled by the coordination reaction rates was studied theor. and verified exptl. For coordination adsorptive catalytic electrode processes, the additive cyclic square wave voltammetry has a higher sensitivity (25 times) than the conventional square wave voltammetry.